202 Madison Ave.

My dear boy-

Here I am established at 202- or rather not yet "established," for my trunk hasn't arrived- which is a great affliction- Mother and Madge arrived this morning. I think they have both grown since I last saw them. The latter I took up to Haarlem on the elevated, and then left her at the "[Windermen?]" I am writing this note particularly to give you the benefit of a very sweet note from Mrs. Boulton this morning- she is very sorry not to be able to offer you a room for Sunday, but Anita's sickness alters the arrangement of her rooms, but at any rate she wants you dear, to be sure and take all your meals here just the same as if you were staying in the house, and to be sure and come here to dinner to-morrow- there- I can't explain it half as well as she did, but at any rate the invitation was very urgent, and Mrs. Boulton has repeated it "by word of mouth." I am going to the Exchange to-morrow to hear the hills and [bears?] carry on. I shall be so glad to welcome my Fuzzy back again. Your cousin M. very kindly invited me to pass a "very informal evening" with just the family" to-night, so I've just written my "regrets" of course you will go. Good bye Fuzzy darling, from your ever loving

Daisy-

P.S. Be sure and give my love to your father, mother and Anna.
Friday, Nov. 25th-
