December 1st.

Dearest boy-

You will be a lovely little Fuzzy I am afraid this evening without your family, won't you? Do you know that you have never once mentioned the fact that they are coming on to-day? I feel as if the Shippens must have made a mistake- at any

[page 2]

I am going to drive with them this evening, and will find out then- I am so disappointed that it is raining so this morning, for I wanted to go out very much- guess I'll go any way- Fuz dear you may be just as disappointed as you like, but the "Equine Paradox" is perfectly splendid- I'll tell you all about them over again when I see you- particularly the "Assine Judge"- Aunt Debs or Deborah and I, after spending half an hour in trying to telephone, have finally concluded that the whole arrangement is a delusion and a [scam?], and not a brilliant invention at all- we could get nothing out of the other end but "Hello!", and finally couldn't even make them say that, someone at this end said they wouldn't say any more because they thought we were trying to fool them. Don't be discouraged dear love about business not coming on faster, you are a very little boy yet, and have lots and lots of time to wait, remember that Fuzzy- This is my very last letter- aren't you glad? and as for me, I simply can't say how delighted I shall be to get [home] again. Remember me to Joanna and Kate dear-

Your loving Daisy.
